Planned Giving Societies

The George Washington University

Planned gifts are financial building blocks for the education of generations to come, ensuring that GW has the resources it needs to continue thriving far into the future. These far-reaching gifts allow GW to plan for the future with confidence that the University will have the means to advance its mission of education, research, and public service. Planned giving options include bequest commitments, gifts of retirement fund assets or life insurance policies, charitable gift annuities, and charitable remainder trusts, among other giving arrangements. The staff of the Office of Planned Giving will be happy to work with you and your financial advisors to create an individually-tailored gift plan that will fulfill your personal philanthropic goals while also providing future support for GW.
